"THE CHILD HANDEL"

Painting by Margaret Isabel Dicksee of an episode in the early life of the famous composer. The elder Handel was bitterly averse to his son becoming a musician, as he feared that he would starve at that profession. He therefore banished the piano to the garret. One night the family was awakened by strains of beautiful music. They traced it to the garret and were thunderstruck at the sight of young Handel sitting at the instrument in his night clothes. The parental objections were overcome and the boy was permitted to pursue the vocation that later made him one of the world masters.

The Returning 77th Passing Under Victory Arch Erected on Fifth Avenue

FIFTH AVENUE Parades and Processions

DURING the past seventy years many of the greatest events in the history of the country have been echoed on Fifth Avenue. It has been the scene of troops departing for and returning from the several wars. Through Fifth Avenue have passed the funeral corteges of some of the greatest men in American history—Abraham Lincoln, President Grant, Admiral Farragut and General Sherman. The anniversaries of great events have been the occasions for memorable parades—the Centennial of Washington's Inauguration, the 400th Anniversary of the Discovery of America and the Hudson-Fulton Celebration.

Admiral Dewey was welcomed home on September 30, 1899, after his victories in Manila Bay by one of the greatest of all parades on Fifth Avenue. The procession moved down the Avenue from Fifty-ninth Street, passed under the Dewey Arch, erected in the Admiral's honor at Madison Square, and on to Washington Square. In the carriages in the line were many of the most prominent men of the day—Governor Theodore Roosevelt, Rear Admirals Schley and Sampson and Senator Chauncey M. Depew. Admiral Dewey and the sailors of his flagship, the Olympia, received deafening applause, while the crowds packing the sides of the Avenue went wild over Schley, the hero of Santiago Bay, and cheered loudly for Governor Roosevelt.

After the Admiral left his carriage and entered the reviewing stand that faced the Worth Monument, he watched for four hours the procession in his honor.

Roosevelt reviewed the New York troops and then hurried back to his rooms in the Fifth Avenue Hotel, greeted on the way with shouts of "Here's to you, Teddy!" and "Long life to the Rough Rider!" Those were great days for Fifth Avenue.

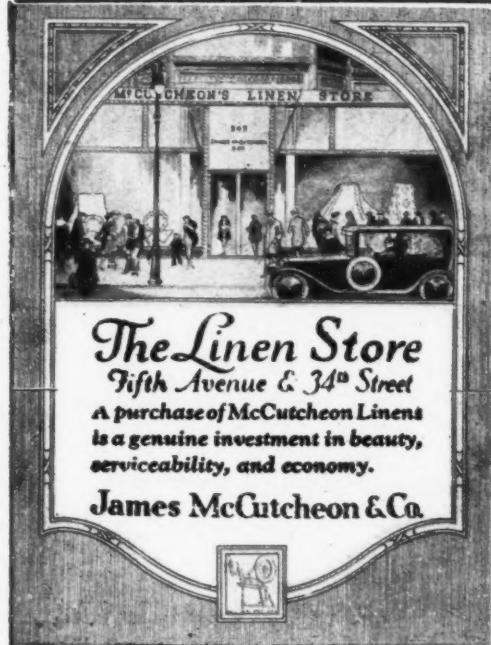

Of sombre aspect were the funeral processions of which that escorting the remains of Admiral Farragut on September 30, 1870, was one of the most impressive. The body was brought by sea from Portsmouth, New Hampshire, thence carried across Canal Street to Fifth Avenue and up the Avenue to the Harlem depot.

The procession was two miles long, and twelve thousand troops were in line, each regiment marching behind its band playing a dirge. There were over two hundred carriages in the procession, carrying relatives and many dignitaries, including President Grant. The whole made up a solemn spectacle the sombreness of which was increased by rain. The tolling of countless bells mingled with the slow music of the dirges and the dull booming of guns. Those were sad days for Fifth Avenue.

But gay or sad, these events have been in the spirit of Fifth Avenue. They have been memorable, historic occasions.

In more recent times the welcome accorded the returning divisions of the A. E. F. have also been historic occasions—gala days that will be remembered to the end of time.

Acknowledgment for historical data is due the Fifth Avenue Bank.
